RICH MULLINS

LINKS

The Legacy exists to provide opportunities for Native American and other at-risk youth to develop skills in music, fine arts, literature, and other artistic pursuits, in the spirit and love of Christ and the example of Saint Francis. It is becoming more widely known that creativity can often be an extremely helpful tool in developing coping skills, healing from trauma, and finding alternative methods of dealing with anger and fear. The teachings of Christ as lived in the life of St. Francis of living simply and loving fully are also beliefs that shape the methods of our work. Walking with those that do not have equal opportunity for development in these areas is part of our mission. Success is redefined for us in our belief that our faith is who we are, not what we do.

The Legacy began in 1998 through the efforts of family and friends after the death of the late (Rich Mullins), a musician living on the Navajo reservation who believed in helping to provide educational and artistic opportunities for Native American people. He also believed in total abandonment to the pursuit of God. He longed for the relentless tenderness of Jesus. He hoped to pass on this desire for the pursuit of God to those who have frequently been harmed in His name. He sought to learn from those who already knew many things about God that we have yet to understand. His approach to his work was to learn as well as teach, to follow as well as lead. We hope to do the same.
